The Cayman Outreach Association (COA) has taken its corporate social responsibility seriously in spearheading a programme to raise funds for the Cayman Island Crisis Centre to build a security shed and to make the grounds more user-friendly for children.

This venture was given a well needed push from law firm Higgs Johnson Truman Bodden & Co (formerly Truman Bodden & Company Ltd.) who donated $500 raised through staff efforts and a top-up contribution from the firm. This was the idea of Maureen Hamilton, a Higgs Johnson Truman Bodden & Co employee who donates her time to help with these COA projects.

Maureen comments; "The Crisis Centre does vital work to support those in our community who are affected by domestic abuse. It relies on donations, which all help, however large or small they may be."

The COA and the Cayman Islands Crisis Centre wholeheartedly thank Higgs Johnson Truman Bodden & Co for its support and for living up to its corporate social responsibility. Ms. Ebanks accepted the cheque on behalf of Rene Grate, Director of the Crisis Centre.
